

IndiaCommons is an initiative to establish an internet-based collection of digital media assets (such as texts, fotos, paintings, illustrations, maps, audio and multimedia data) with relevance to contemporary India and its history.

IndiaCommons serves the need of free access and exchange in education, science, art and communication.

IndiaCommons seeks fair conditions among scientists, artists, distributors, publishers and users in regard of the economy of attention.

IndiaCommons builds up an international network of institutions and private persons with the common interest to combine professionalism and open access.

IndiaCommons conveys services, knowledge and consulting in all aspects of high quality media asset management. From project planning and setting up media standards to digitalization, classification, metadata management, storage management, protection from loss due to risks in format changes and other risks in archiving.

The IndiaCommons initiative is launched and supported by the "bj institute". It is not profit orientated. Its funding is based on contributions. In addition affiliations and advertisement revenues may be used to cover the expences.
